NGC publishes 2022 Sustainability Report

30th October 2023

In a demonstration of its unflagging commitment to transparency and alignment with global best practice, The National Gas Company of Trinidad and Tobago Limited (NGC) has published its 6th annual Sustainability Report, covering the period January to December 2022. To date, NGC maintains its leadership role in sustainability reporting among local state enterprises.

Sustainability reporting is a mechanism which allows companies to voluntarily disclose details of the economic, social, governance and environmental impacts of their business, guided by an international reporting standard. More specifically, through this reporting framework, companies can track and communicate how their business affects or supports achievement of the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs).

As with previous reports, NGC's 2022 report includes statistics around the company's key material impacts such as: economic impact; updates on contract renewals and other work along the energy value chain; metrics around the company's safety performance, workforce and employee development; milestones achieved in the areas of governance and compliance; and contributions made through its Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) portfolio. NGC's Green Agenda activities also feature prominently - the report discloses the company's internal targets and initiatives that support climate action, the energy transition and national emissions reduction efforts.

NGC's President Mark Loquan commented on the publication: "We live in an age when business success is closely tied to sustainability performance. Companies need to track their impact – both positive and negative - on stakeholders and the environment, and demonstrate a willingness to work on their weaknesses. We at NGC are accountable to the people of Trinidad and Tobago and we will continue to measure and disclose our impact through these sustainability reports, to keep citizens aware of what we are doing right and where we need to improve. These reports have also helped orient our internal planning and strategies, as they enable us to identify the strengths we must build on and the gaps we need to close."
